WHAT'S UP

Bortoleto has opened his rookie campaign in some fashion, taking victory in Sakhir and Melbourne on Sunday to lead the Drivers' Championship with 58 points. A tangle with Rafael Villagómez in the Sakhir Sprint Race represents his only non-scoring result of the season. Discounting that, he has finished every race inside the top six.

Grégoire Saucy has been quick in every session so far this year and is Bortoleto's closest challenger in the Standings. The Swiss driver has 38 points to his name and four point-scoring finishes out of four. He is the only driver on the F3 grid with a perfect record still intact.

Dino Beganovic has been quiet so far this season arriving in F3 off the back of his Formula Regional European Championship title in 2022, but PREMA Racing's Swede has quietly gone about his business. He arrives in Monaco with one Feature Race podium to his name (3rd, Sakhir) and but for a post-race penalty in Melbourne, would have a scoring record to match Saucy's also.

Gabriele Minì is yet to take an official victory but the Italian has been quick all year so far. The Hitech Pulse-Eight driver is fourth, tied with Beganovic on 28 points but has arguably been Bortoleto's closest challenger on track.

Josep María Martí surged through the field from 30th and last on the grid to finish P7 in one of the most impressive drives in FIA F3 history in Melbourne. The Spaniard has a Sprint Race win from Sakhir and two more point-scoring finishes to put him fifth in the Drivers' Championship on 25 points.

Trident has a 30-point advantage in the Teams' Standings over PREMA Racing, 100 points to 70. Third placed Hitech Pulse-Eight follow on 54 points ahead of ART Grand Prix on 45 and Campos Racing on 29, fourth and fifth respectively.

FROM THE GRID

Oliver GOETHE
Trident

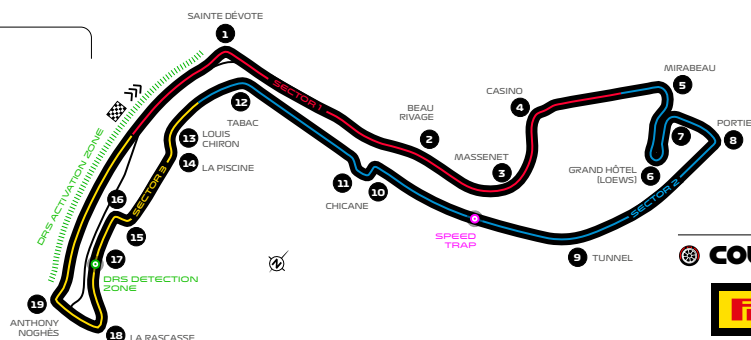

"It's such a unique place. It's a very small country and it's really nice, the track is amazing. I can't wait to drive there this year. Driving there in Formula Regional was amazing last year, the results weren't great in 2021 but this year I'm confident it can be a lot better. It's such a cool track, it's probably the only one with a tunnel that I'll be driving at. The swimming pool chicane is really fast, I enjoy the whole thing. Overtaking is not the easiest. If you pressure the person in front into a mistake then it's possible. I'd say the best places are under braking after the tunnel and then Rascasse.

We've seen some nice moves there in the past but anywhere will do! Tyre deg should be a bit easier with it being a street track. It's a bit of a home race for me, I grew up and go to school there still to this day. All my friends will be watching along with my family which will be really cool. I also get to sleep at home which is nice!"

TYRE TALK

Mario ISOLA

Pirelli Motorsport Director

"It will be great to see Formula 3 cars racing on the streets of Monaco once again alongside Formula 1 and Formula 2.

As is the case for those championships, the low wear and degradation rates produced by the tight and technical street circuit mean that we bring the softest available tyre compound – which for Formula 3 is the P Zero Red soft. This compound has been revised for 2023, with Monaco being its first appearance, and should provide the drivers with optimal performance as they get to grips with the circuit. Extracting that performance will likely be critical in the split qualifying session to secure track position for the races, with no mandatory pit-stops in Formula 3."

DID YOU KNOW?

Formula 3 Qualifying will mirror the same format as F2, with two groups separating the grid in half for two shortened sessions. Groups A and B are then aggregated together to form the grid, with the group that earns the fastest time overall starting from pole and the other fastest driver starting P2.

Positions then alternate between the groups for the remaining positions based on the results of Split Qualifying.

For the Sprint Race, the top 12 will be reversed. The sixth fastest car from the second group will start on pole, with the sixth fastest car from the faster group alongside them in P2.

STAT PACK

Championship leader Gabriel Bortoleto could join Zane Maloney in an exclusive club should he win a third consecutive Feature Race this weekend. The Brazilian would become just the second F3 driver to achieve the feat.

Victory in three out of the four races so far have been achieved by less than a second, with only Josep María Martí taking the Sakhir Sprint Race win by 1.8s.

Grégoire Saucy is the only driver to have scored points across the entirety of the first two rounds. The Swiss driver has finished no lower than eighth so far.

12 drivers have previously raced around the Principality, with just Dino Beganovic bringing home a win.

Monte Carlo becomes the 14th track to make its debut on the Formula 3 calendar.
