A weekend that will not only crown the new champion, but also celebrate a special milestone with the 100th race in the series' history, set to take place in Sunday's Race 2.

It all comes down to this. After nine fiercely contested rounds across Europe, three drivers from three different teams remain in contention for the 2025 crown. Freddie Slater (Prema Racing) leads the standings with 263 points, followed closely by Matteo De Palo (Trident Motorsport) on 259, while Enzo Deligny (R-ace GP), currently third with 233, keeps his title hopes alive heading into the final battle at the Temple of Speed.

One of them will be etched in the championship's history as the fifth title winner, following Grégoire Saucy (2021), Dino Beganovic (2022), Andrea Kimi Antonelli (2023) and Rafael Camara (2024).

Beyond the title contenders, several drivers are still fighting to improve their positions in the overall standings. Pedro Clerot (Van Amersfoort Racing) currently sits in fourth overall with 212 points, followed by Akshay Bohra (R-ace GP) on 155 and Evan Giltair (ART Grand Prix) with 152. Rashid Al Dhaheri (Prema Racing) lies seventh with 95 points, ahead of Hiyu Yamakoshi (Van Amersfoort Racing) on 86 and Taito Kato (ART Grand Prix) on 83. Jin Nakamura (R-ace GP) completes the current top ten with 71 points.
